

◆ Introduction

Are you interested in the environmental issues in the world? Do you concern the emission of greenhouse gas and even change your daily life to reduce the emission?

In this talk, the speaker will first apply the theory of justice to analyzing the distribution of environmental impacts at a global, country, regional, and neighborhood level. Then the speaker will review, for correcting environmental injustice, public protests and environmental movements have pressured the government to change the paradigm of development. Lastly, the speaker will discuss how quality of life and happiness have guided some pioneer countries in their national development planning. Of course, the implications for Hong Kong will also be discussed.
