2. analyse the interconnections between ecological security and other domains such as public health, economic stability, and social cohesion;
3. recognise significant risks to ecological security, such as climate change, biodiversity decline, pollution, and resource depletion;
4. reflect on the roles and responsibilities of individuals, communities, and governments in protecting ecological security.

National Security Talk Series

◆ Gifted Programme Introduction

This two-hour interactive talk is designed to introduce the idea of ecological security, emphasising its importance as a key element of both national and global security. The content includes ecological security and public health, economic stability, and social cohesion.

Through inquiry-driven activities and case studies, students will analyse critical ecological threats such as climate change, loss of biodiversity, pollution, and the depletion of resources. They will also consider the shared responsibilities of individuals, communities, and governments in protecting and sustaining ecological security.
